Lupin and his Brotherhood of Thievery

Goemon Ishikawa

A samurai warrior who occasionally helps the Lupin organization. Initially betrayed by the eponymous master thief, this master swordsman now sees the value in Lupin's particular brand of honor. He is the thirteenth in a long line of samurai warriors committed to anything but international crime. However, as they say, when in Osaka...

With a .38 Double-Action Colt Executive tucked in his shorts and the brim of his fedora tilted forward over his mysterious eyes, Jigen has become Lupin's best friend and partner in crime... when the two are getting along. Jigen distrusts Fujiko's seductive charms over his buddy, and though he tolerates her, he never takes his eyes off her... but who can really? Not much is known of Jigen's past and that's just the way he likes it.

Daisuke Jigen

Fujiko Mine

A fine furtive femme fatale with a fancy for heists and a talent for tantalizing treasures out of men. She and Lupin may be in love, or they may simply be enraptured by and envious of each other's talent. When they work together, they are an unstoppable force; when against each other, they are fiery foes. Perhaps she distrusts the shady Jigen back... or maybe she just fears that the Mafioso-like cretin might actually have her number.

A master thief extraordinaire, charming, sophisticated, libidinous, and above all, cocky. Lupin has also come from a long line of his profession, dating way back to his grandfather, Arsène Lupin I, and holds up the family name well—nicking priceless goods that are easy to move on the black market, dancing around the globe in the midst of geopolitical crisis, and bagging babes wrenched from the bed of god himself.
